

POETRY

Touch Of Love

Abdullahi Yahaya

I feel your love in my bone,
My strength to face the stone.

Your love shines my eyes bright,
In darkness to see the light.

I am your angel to meet,
Who can set you on your feet.

Without your love to feel unwell,
To feel empty like a broken shell.

Rest your shoulder in my arm,
In love to keep your body warm.

Author's Note

Abdullahi Yahaya is a 22-year-old writer from Rikkos, Jos, Plateau State, Nigeria where he attended the Rikkos Community Secondary School. Creative writing has been his passion since secondary school. His dream is to become a best-known writer and to touch other people's emotions through creative writing. Most of his writing centers on correcting the social and political ills of contemporary society. Abdullahi has been a participant in many local and international literary contests. He has won literary awards and certificates of excellence in poetry, short story, essay, and article writing. Many of his works have been published in both local and international literary journals, anthologies, books, websites, and magazines. He is a member and co-founder of the Association of Nigerian Authors, Jos Chapter; a member of the World Literary Forum; and a member of the Society of Young Nigerian Writers.